SUPERIOR COURT IN SESSION AT RUMFORD

At the annual meeting of the Paris Apple Growers' Association held Saturday, March 10, in the South Paris Fire Hall, the members of last year's board of directors were re-elected as follows: Seward P. Stearns, Ellis Ellingwood, John McKeen, Irving E. Andrews, and Oayma J. Coby. Officers elected from and by the directors were: president, Seward P. Stearns; vice-president, John McKeen; and secretary-treasurer, Oayma J. Colby.

Other matters of business were disposed of and then the possibility of buying spray material and fertilizers through the association was discussed.

George Skinner of A. W. Walker & Son talked to the men relative to spray materials and told of some advantages and disadvantages of group buying. Mr. Sawyer, representing the International Fertilizer Company, then gave an interesting and enlightening talk on the possibilities and limitations of purchasing fertilizer as a group. He discussed the code and explained how it would affect such buying.

From the discussion that took place and questions that were asked and answered, it would seem that the organization might benefit some by pooling the orders of its members and buying in quantity. This would provide a means of starting a fund that would be available for use during packing season some time ago.

Word has been received of the death of Mrs. Josephine Kimball Blake, Feb. 21, 1934, in Los Angeles California.

Mrs. Blake was born in Bethel Oct. 7, 1857, the third child of Israel G. and Lavina Duston Kimball. She married Frank Blake of Bethel and they went to Colorado, mining for silver near Creede, where Mr. Blake died several years ago.

Mrs. Blake has been in poor health for several years but suffered a shock February 14 from which she failed to rally. She is survived by two daughters, Josephine Blake and Mrs. Alice Records; two sons, Henry and Don, several grand children, all of California; one sister, Mrs. Mabel K. Bean of Bellows Falls, Vermont; and one brother, B. W. Kimball of Bethel, Maine.

MRS. JOSEPHINE K. BLAKE

Seven indictments were returned by the grand jury Wednesday morning, five of which were made public:

Omer A. Moxcey of Waterford, manslaughter.

Thomas S. Hall of Fryeburg, arson.

William E. Guptill of Lovell, breaking, entering and larceny.

Arthur Ayotte of Rumford, larceny of automobile.

William Juskevitch of Rumford, adultery.

When arraigned in court Saturday morning, Omer Moxcey pleaded guilty to drunken driving and manslaughter. Leon Bean of South Paris lost his life after being thrown from a truck driven by Moxcey on Feb. 6 in Norway when the truck bounced on a rut. In his fall he was caught and dragged by a rope.

Thomas Hall of Fryeburg was charged with setting fire to two sets of his farm buildings, destroying in all two houses, two barns, a garage, a pair of horses, several head of cattle, 75 tons of hay, 200 bushels of oats, a quantity of sweet corn, ensilage and farming tools.

This occurred on the night of Sept. 30, and it is claimed that on Dec. 20 he made the confession that he had started both fires.

On Saturday afternoon Justice Holmes, in the absence of Justice Manser, reported in favor of the referees' report in the suit of James H. Kerr vs. George A. Hutchins. Justices Manser and Hudson had been the referees, and their report was in favor of Kerr in the sum of $3,860. Hutchins objected and the case will be tried in the law court.

Jason George Smith of South Paris was awarded $556.25 Tuesday in a suit against Leonard Farley of Portland. Smith claimed that Farley was the father of a child born to his daughter last December.

The hearing of the reply in the case of the Nashua Gummied and Coated Paper Co. vs. William Gauthier was begun Tuesday morning. In 1930, Henry Dufresne, as proprietor of the Ch-

Miss Edna Cobb, State Home Management Specialist, was well pleased at the reception accorded her in Bethel on March 4, when 30 men and women braved icy roads to hear her discuss "The Maine Tourist Home." Four women came all the way from Upton and one from Rumford. Pictures of bed rooms, living rooms, and kitchens showed the high standards of convenience and beauty which can be had with the expenditure of small amounts of money.

After the pictures the audience discussed with Miss Cobb some of their problems. Meetings on this subject are being held only in Knox-Lincoln and Oxford Counties.

PITY THE POOR PEDESTRIAN

Pity the poor pedestrian in the great American traffic tangle. Dodging, skipping, cont-tails flying, he continues annually to account for nearly half of all our automobile accident fatalities.

Pity him not only because speeding careless, brakeless, light-heaving motorists cut him down without mercy. Invade his street safety zones, and slaughter him as he steps from street cars and busses—but pity him also because his own stupidity remains his unrestrained enemy. He still crosses streets against traffic signals, walks along the wrong side of rural highways with his back to traffic, plays in the street, and is the most flagrant Jay-walker in the world. In this last capacity, he crosses between intersections, invites highway murder by coming out from behind parked cars, and makes himself a pot-shot target by crossing diagonally at intersections. Pity him because last year 13,440 out of a total of 29,000 persons killed in traffic accidents, according to the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, were members of his clan. One in three, or 33%, were Jay-walkers. The foot traveler is apparently the product of a horse and buggy age who cannot master the rules of a motorized era. His species, as such, may soon be extinct, for his children, happily, are worlds safer. They have learned that playing tag with high-powered cars is a futile game. They cross at designated cross walks, wait for the signal light, and walk on the left-hand side of the road, facing traffic.

Pity the poor pedestrian, but drive reckless, killer-type motorists from the road!

The average portion which each man, woman and child owes for Federal and local government debts totals about $300, or approximately $1,200 for every family of four. Repayment of principal and interest comes out of earnings of every citizen and industry.

THINGS ONE REMEMBERS

By R. M. Hofer

I was feeling particularly depressed after reading the morning paper at breakfast—murders, scandals, the air mail imbroglio, was threatened, the dollar of uncertain value, stock market shaky and the worried citizen facing the greatest taxes and the greatest Federal debt in history—when in came four young people, past voting age. "Is mine married this morning?" asked all four.

BABY CHICKS RETURN GREATEST PROFITS

By E. D. Griffin, Formerly Extension Poultryman Purdue University

If we stop to consider the primary reason for raising chicks each year, we will soon realize the importance of getting the baby chicks at an early date. Probably no less than 90% of all baby chicks hatched are produced with one idea—pullet layers at maturity.

It is, therefore, advisable that consideration be given the important question of the best time to procure the baby chicks. When do we want egg production from the pullets? The answer should be at the time of the year when egg prices are the highest.

For many years market figures on egg prices have shown that the fall and early winter months command the best prices for eggs. November is usually the peak month, with October, December, September and January following in about that order. The reason for higher egg prices during these months is smaller supply due to lower production. Good hens that have gone through a year's production are normally in molt and low production at this season. Hence, production must come largely from the pullets.

In order to get profitable production from pullets in October, November and December, the pullets must be started at a time that will allow them to mature and be on the job when prices are highest. For the light breeds five to six months will be necessary to get 40 to 50% production and desirable egg size. For heavy breeds four to six weeks additional time will be necessary.

Many successful poultrymen plan to get their heavy-breed chicks during the period from March 1st to April 15th and chicks of the light breeds from April 1st to May 15th. Thus they assure themselves of pullet production when production means most in dollars and cents.

The program just suggested has one other feature that is often overlooked. Half of the chicks will be cockerels that need to be disposed of as broilers. The earlier the chicks are started, the better will be the income from the cockerels sold as broilers, because they can be sold before the heavy supply reaches the markets and causes the price to decline.

The 1933 potato crop in Maine has been estimated at 42,000,000 bushels, an increase of 1,540,000 bushels of the estimation for 1932. The total apple crop was estimated at 1,884,000 bushels, 27 per cent less than the crop of 1932.

PROBATE APPOINTMENTS

The following subscribers have given notice that they have received appointments from the Probate Court of Oxford County indicated. All persons having demands against the estates represented by them are desired to present the same for settlement and all indebted thereto are requested to make payment immediately.

ENOCH ABBOTT, late of Upton deceased; Cora C. Abbott of same, executrix without bond, Feb. 20, 1934.

ANNIE F. CROSS, late Greenwood, deceased; Mary Cross of Arlington, Massachusetts, administratrix de bonis non, without bond, Ellery C. Park, Bethel, Maine, Agent, Feb. 20, 1934.

NELLIE E. CROSS, late Greenwood, deceased; Mary Cross of Arlington, Massachusetts, administratrix with bond, Feb. 1934.

JOSEPH S. RICH, late of New York, deceased; Stella K. Newborn of New York City, Stephen G. Rich of Verona, New Jersey and Friend of Tuttle, Yonkers, N. Y., executors without bond, Dec. 19, 1933.

STATE OF MAINE

To all persons interested in either of the Estates hereinabove named.

At a Probate Court, held at Paris and for the County of Oxford, on the third Tuesday of February, the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four, and by adjournment from day to day from the third Tuesday of February. The following matter having been presented for the action thereupon hereinafter indicated, it is hereby ORDERED:

That notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by causing a copy of this order to be published three weeks successively in the Oxford County Citizen a newspaper published at Bethel, in said County, that they may appear at a Probate Court to be held at said Paris, on the third Tuesday of March, D. 1934, at 9 of the clock in the forenoon, and be heard thereon accordingly.

When the court seemed disposed to take up this point, Doctor White continued, "As I see it, your most considerable claim is that your son entered into an agreement of partnership with Mr. Jordan, when both of them managed by methods that were high handed but justified, I think, in disposing of Sebastian. If it had not been for their action there is no telling what might have happened. Miss Poole and I recognize that fact most fully, and desire to give it full credit. But you must yourself agree that it gives Mr. Jordan quite as strong a moral claim as any of us have."

The court looked thoughtful at this, but voiced no protest. He was sensible enough to see that legally he had scarcely any claim at all; and in any case that litigation would have been so involved as to seem hopeless. There were also other considerations of which he was indisposed to speak.

Sebastian had taken himself off, back no doubt to the safer and more profitable traffic of rum running. In this he was wise, for not only could the charge of sabotage be brought against him but there were four creditable persons prepared to swear that he had been about to commit murderous assault with a lethal weapon, when interrupted. Sebastian must have realized that there was little chance of his recovering anything for the sinking of his cruiser. Tom might have claimed an accidental collision in the fog, in which case he could have been held responsible only to the value of his boat, this not worth much after ramming maneuver.

Nettie E. McBride, late of Gilford, deceased; Will and petition to probate thereof and the appointment of John A. McBride as executor of the same to act with bond as expressed in said will, presented by John A. McBride, executor therein named.

Nora A. Marsden, late of Bethel, deceased; Will and petition to probate thereof and the appointment of Nelle M. Burbank as executrix of the same to act with bond as expressed in said will, presented by Nelle M. Burbank, executrix therein named.

Willie E. McBride, late of Gilford, deceased; Will and petition to probate thereof and the appointment of John A. McBride as executor of the same to act with bond as expressed in said will, presented by John A. McBride, executor therein named.

Witness, Peter M. Macdonald, Judge of said Court at Paris, the 26th day of February in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four.

CHAPTER XI

IT HAD been proposed by Doctor White that they all might save themselves unnecessary argument and discord if they were to postpone discussion of their legal, moral and other claims to whatever might be salvaged from the Fourquet, until such time as they might be able to estimate the value of such salvage, if any, and its character. He had admitted freely to count de Corlay and Robert that they were, in his opinion, entitled to a due share of any property that might be proved to have belonged to their ancestor, personally and uncontestedly. Doctor White made it clear that he could not consider such to be booty that might have been taken from enemy ships and therefore subject to estimate and fair division as spoils of war.

The De Corlays, pere et fils, were obliged to be content with this, the point being uncontested.

Doctor White had clearly defined their position when he said, "Your own efforts, gentlemen, had nothing whatever to do with my ward's discovery of the position of the wreck. That was made before she knew anything about you or your presence here. Mr. Jordan already had made preparations for his search.

He was working on a wrong theory, and Miss Poole, knowing this, would only to save him useless effort and expense. But we admit freely that your presence here, and what you told us, led to our deciding that there was no time to lose, and acting accordingly."

When the court seemed disposed to take up this point, Doctor White continued, "As I see it, your most considerable claim is that your son entered into an agreement of partnership with Mr. Jordan, when both of them managed by methods that were high handed but justified, I think, in disposing of Sebastian. The De Corlays, pere et fils, were obliged to be content with this, the point being incontestable.

Doctor White had clearly defined their position when he said, "Your own efforts, gentlemen, had nothing whatever to do with my ward's discovery of the position of the wreck. That was made before she knew anything about you or your presence here. Mr. Jordan already had made preparations for his search."

He was working on a wrong theory, and Miss Poole, knowing this, would have hastened to prove the location if only to save him useless effort and expense. But we admit freely that your presence here, and what you told us, led to our deciding that there was no time to lose, and acting accordingly."

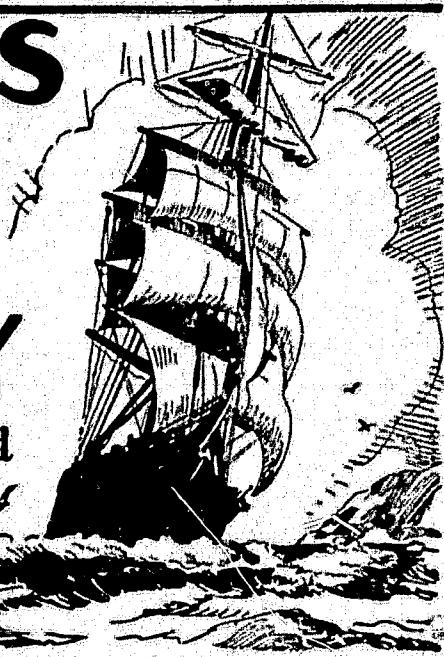

When the count seemed disposed to take up this point, Doctor White continued, "As I see it, your most considerable claim is that your son entered into an agreement of partnership with Mr. Jordan, when both of them managed by methods that were high handed but justified, I think, in disposing of Sebastian. If it had not been for their action there is no telling what might have happened. Miss Poole and I recognize that fact most fully, and desire to give it full credit. But you must yourself agree that it gives Mr. Jordan quite as strong a moral claim as any of us have."

The count looked thoughtful at this, but voiced no protest. He was sensible enough to see that legally he had scarcely any claim at all; and in any case that litigation would have been so involved as to seem hopeless. There were also other considerations of which he was indisposed to speak.

Sebastian had taken himself off, back no doubt to the safer and more profitable trials of rum running. In this he was wise, for not only could the charge of sabotage be brought against him but there were four creditable persons prepared to swear that he had been about to commit murderous assault with a lethal weapon, when interrupted. Sebastian must have realized that there was little chance of his recovering anything for the sinking of his cruiser. Tom might have claimed an accidental collision in the fog, in which case he could have been held responsible only to the value of his boat, this not worth much after a ramming maneuver.

Mike arrived in due course, and went about his operations with the skilled assistance of Tom and Robert. A section of the Fourquet's side was dynamited and a number of articles interesting to the antiquarian recovered. The diver gained access to what evidently had been the quarters of the commanding officer, but failed to discover anything of much intrinsic worth. He found some pieces of silver plate and drinking cups and a handsome punch bowl. Then he reported three small cannon of the culverin sort, but not as long as was customary in such guns of the Sixteenth century, which Doctor White thought from the description would have been the epoch of their casting.

According to honest Mike, these unmounted guns evidently had been held in reserve, down on the keel, where they contributed to serve as ballast. When the Fourquet turned turtle they either had crashed through the decks, or smashed through later from their weight, finally to come to rest on a main beam of the spar deck, that was on bottom.

The count de Corlay and Doctor White were both out aboard the diver's yawl when this report was made, and the agitation of the count, though contained in a masterly manner, did not escape the keen observation of the doctor. Not unnaturally, for Mike's English was crude, the count interrogated him in his native Portuguese. But this did not prevent Doctor White from arriving at his own conclusions. He was more and more convinced that the bore of those guns contained something of interest not only to the collector of antiquities, but to the collector of cold cash.

"Let's get those guns up and aboard," he said.

Mike shook his head. "Dem things too damn' heavy, sir. Suppose we try lift 'em aboard, da tackle bust."

"Could you get them up along side?" Tom asked.

"I guess so, boss. Don't take a much to lift 'em in da water."

"Then go down and rig a chain strap on one of them and we will drift it over to the beach at high water," the doctor advised. "We can handle them from there."

This accordingly was done. But even then Tom, who was lassing the job of hoisting, trembled for his gear. Looking over the side at the gun came near awash he was surprised to find it no larger. The yawl must, he thought, be tender for this piece of ordnance, less its specific gravity, to give her such a heel. It was not a very ornate cannon, and it seemed to be covered with some sort of gummy slime rather than the tarnish of verdigris that one might have expected.

The tide was flowing in at this moment, about three-quarters high, and as it was time to knock off for midday dinner they decided to wait until after their meal, then float the cannon over to the beach when it might be examined at leisure later in the day. This program was carried out, accordingly, when Doctor White, although finding it repugnant to suspect a French officer and gentleman for whom he had conceived a sincere liking and respect, still kept a wary eye on the spot where that gun had been deposited.

The two others were handled in like manner, Tom towing the yawl into the little cove behind the battered launch, for the damage to which he had insisted on inking full indemnity. Then, when the twelve feet drop of tide had left the pieces of ordnance high and the interested little throng of spectators had departed for their respective suppers, the treasure hunters went over to examine what did not seem to provide any great remuneration for their toil, expense and incidental danger.

There were only the five of the actively interested. Aunt Martha had soiled at this poor find and returned to the more important detail of supper. Mike had chugged over to town. Doctor White, walking down the hard shingle with the count, stood looking at the guns reflectively.

"Odd that they should be so foul," he observed.

Tom leaned down and scraped at the gummy coating with his knife's edge. It was displaced to show a brass gleam beneath, at which Tom scratched with the point of the blade, that scurried it very slightly. "Looks like pure brass," he said, "a little dull for our kud, but about as hard. Wonder what this gummy stuff was for. It isn't sea slime. More like wax, or rubber."

The count cleared his throat. He was pale, and his hand trembled a little on his malacca stick. "For many years," he said truthfully enough, "gunners have had the habit of covering their ordnance with such a preparation when they are not required to keep them polished."

Doctor White tapped the mouth of the gun sharply with the iron tip of his own stilex. It gave a dull bell note. Then, deliberately, he shoved his cane into the muzzle and along to where it fetched up at the breach, laying off the depth on the out-side of the piece. Calmly, he repeated this measuring of the other two. All three were the same, and all three were empty, even of the weed or shell or any other sediment that might have been expected of their long immersion.

If this examination suggested anything to the minds of count de Corlay or his son, their expressions gave no hint of it. As for Doctor White, he could have found it in his heart to be glad his inspection had nothing to reveal. It would have pained him to discover that these distinguished Frenchmen were capable of sordid deceit, if such indeed it could have been considered. But not only was the doctor relieved, in a sense he was also puzzled. It seemed to him that he had felt a tension in the air from the moment of Mike's description of these guns, and that this tension had steadily increased.

"Well," said Tom shortly, "at least they are not duds."

The count slowly shook his head. He looked as if suddenly taken ill. "No," he drew a deep breath, "they are not duds." his voice trailed off into a sort of attenuated whisper. "They are not duds."

THE SECRET OF CONTENT

It isn't what a fellow has that clothes him with content, That puts him in that frame of mind where joy and peace are blest, And makes him feel that compensated are those who plan and strive;

That he's in truth, well satisfied, and glad that he's alive.

It isn't money stored in banks there placed to his account,

It isn't mortgages he holds of fabulous amount;

Nay, none of these sheathe worry's thorns as down life's path we jaunt,

It isn't what a fellow has, but what he doesn't want!

Though wandering feet may be a curse, far more than itching hands'

That grasp, but never satisfy, their cravings and demands,

Though rolling stones accumulate but very little moss,

They don't, like avaricious palms, keep smarting at their loss.

And so, the man of modest wants, who keeps his desires curbed, Strolls side by side with happiness when others walk perturbed.

Possessions ne'er make man immune from cares that siege or haunt—

It isn't what a fellow has, but what he doesn't want.

If one's by wish or want imbued, his days will all be spent In futile spurts upon life's road to overtake content.

If one's desires modest be, he'll find them all supplied,

And be a constant "Sunny Jim," with life well satisfied.

It isn't bonds that make for cheer, nor stock that peace supplies; It isn't silver pleasure brings nor gold contentment buys.

It isn't bank or treasury notes, though listfuls you may flaunt It isn't what a fellow has, but what he doesn't want.

Refunding Bonds

The process of refunding means the exchange of a new debt obligation for an old one. When for example a government is unable to repay money borrowed from the bond holders on the date repayment is due, it may issue new bonds and exchange them for the old ones, or sell them to obtain cash to pay off the maturing obligations. This is frequently done by railroads and other private corporations which regard their bonds as representing a portion of the capital employed in their business. Lutz' Public Finance states that public debt which represents capital invested in reproductive commercial undertakings may properly enough be refunded from time to time in this way, while there is a disapproval of the general practice of refunding the mass of public debt which represents outlays for nonproductive purposes.

Termite Queen Lay Many Eggs

The termite queen, from a small insect one-eighth inch in length, gradually increases in size as the colony grows and food becomes abundant, until in some cases she reaches the size of a small potato, or more than three inches in length. At this stage she is fed entirely by the workers. The termite queen is the champion of all forms of life in reproduction. Termite queens have been known to produce eggs at the rate of 60 a minute for long periods, or at the rate of 80,400 a day. This enables the termite colony to wreak such extensive damage so quickly after becoming once established. The termite is a wood-eater and lives on and digests cellulose. Certain animals, such as the goat and the moose, can digest cellulose owing to certain secretions in their stomach juices.

Holiest Monks' Retreat

Inaccessible retreats once inhabited by "the holiest monks" have been unearthed in the desert sand some ten miles from the Wadi Natrun, Egypt. The traveler, who carried out the excavations, claims to have located the site of the hitherto undiscovered district of Cella, where early Christian monks lived so far apart they could neither see nor hear one another. The only occasions on which they met were on Saturdays and Sundays, when they assembled at the church—a central building which this author claims to have identified about ten miles from the northwest corner of the Wadi Natrun.

First Gas Cars

The modern automobile was a development of the gasoline internal combustion engine invented by Otto in 1876. Carl Benz of Mannheim, Germany, built the first gasoline-propelled vehicles in 1885 and 1886, but these were tricycles or motorcycles rather than automobiles; two years later Panhard and Levassor bought the French rights and built a gasoline-operated motor car. According to some authorities, in 1876 Siegfried Marcus, an Austrian, built a four-wheeled vehicle powered by an internal combustion engine.

Uncle Sam Paid France

France received from the United States all of the money which was borrowed during the time of the American Revolution. This debt was discharged between 1791 and 1795 by money borrowed in Holland. The latter debt was finally paid Holland in the early part of the Nineteenth century. The money borrowed from France was borrowed between the years 1778 and 1782. The interest on these loans was forgiven until 1788, and in fact little interest was paid until 1790.—Washington Star.

Some Acorns Edible

The general use of the acorn as an article of food has long since ceased, but back in ancient days it was an important article of food.

In fact, it was considered that eating the acorn added years to a man's life and great strength to his muscles. Indians of the New England regions formerly ate the acorn of certain types of white oaks, while the sweet acorn of the California white oak is still ground into a coarse flour used in bread. Over in England the people of the rural communities bordering on the royal forests have the right every fall to turn their pigs loose in the woodlands in order that they may grow fat on the fallen acorns.
